

MarineBio.org

<http://marinebio.org/>

Posted: June 19, 2006

MarineBio.org is a volunteer effort by marine biologists, students, professors and conservation advocates to promote research, education and a "sea ethic"—an understanding of the sea's importance to life on Earth and to human civilization.

The site covers nearly every aspect of marine biology, from species profiles and conservation articles to photo galleries and links to research and other resources. All are provided in a simple, appealing design with clear, consistent menus.

At least 80 percent of the world's oceans remain unexplored, and they contain most of the world's biomass and biodiversity. This site will be a valuable resource for professionals, educators and curious visitors.

Site of the Week Archive